To evaluate patients with seminal vesicle tumours treated in our department. A retrospective study of 10 patients with seminal vesicle tumours treated in our department. All patients have been treated with laparoscopic or open resection. We report our experience and outline the technical details of these procedures. All patients were initially evaluated with urine cytology, prostate-specific antigen assay and post-coital test. Seven patients were subsequently assessed with magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) of the pelvis. Laparoscopic or open resection of seminal vesicle tumours. The seminal vesicles were removed at the time of laparoscopy in 5 of the 10 patients and biopsies were taken at the time of laparoscopy in the other five patients. All patients had a normal post-coital test, a normal blood test and urine cytology. In all 10 patients MRI showed a thickening of the seminal vesicles, with a maximum diameter of 35 mm in four patients, and a smooth hyperintensity in all patients on T2 images.
