Introduction

Welcome to my resource guide and Ebook, “The 5 Biggest Mistakes Parents Make Homeschooling High School!” Before we get started, let me introduce myself. My name is Lee Binz and I am The HomeScholar. I homeschooled my two children from 3rd grade through high school. When they graduated, I gave them a homeschool diploma and a handmade transcript with my own mommy-grades. Amazingly, my two homeschool graduates were both admitted and given great scholarships to every college to which they applied. Best of all, they were both given four year, full-tuition scholarships to their first choice university!

Through this process, I learned some amazing strategies for how to homeschool high school. With my kids successfully launched, my mission now is to help parents like you homeschool through high school.

I am very excited to share some of the most valuable lessons I've learned from homeschooling my own children and from helping other homeschool parents succeed through the high school years.

With each chapter, I've listed one or more featured resources that will provide you additional help along the way. Let's get going!

Blessings,
Lee Binz

Mistake 1: Not Preparing for College

We've been taught to assume that a college prep education is only for college-bound kids. But college preparation is GREAT life preparation. The first big mistake that parents make in their homeschool is failing to aim for college!

In this first chapter, you will learn what you can do to provide a college preparation for your own children and why a college prep education is important.

A homeschool high school college prep education covers reading, writing, and math - skills critical to any profession. It covers history, so that our society isn't doomed to repeat it! It covers sciences for critical thinking, and civics so that our students can vote effectively. It covers the foreign languages so that we better understand the world around us, and physical fitness for health.

A college prep education is important for all children. If a child is going on to college, then of course they need a college prep high school. But what if you think they may NOT go to college? What then? Then their homeschool experience may be their only formal education, and we have to make it good. If they aren't going on to college, then they are going directly into the workforce. They need to be prepared, so that they are good citizens, can function in their chosen career, and can vote knowledgeably.

You can't always know what the future holds

Have you ever noticed that sometimes (often!) teens will change their minds? My good friend had a son that loved motors. He was always bringing home little stray engines the way other kids might bring home little stray puppies. She became convinced that her son would become a mechanic. Positive that her child wouldn't go to college, and therefore wouldn't need math, she was never concerned about pushing him along. He loved engines so much - it was an obvious fit, right?

Well, one day he announced that he wanted to be an engineer, and suddenly he needed calculus! Children change their minds, and sometimes even parents can't assume that things will end up a certain way.

Maximize flexibility

Planning a college prep high school will allow your children to change their minds. It will allow them to pursue ANY college they suddenly long for, and ANY profession they become enamored with! Planning for college will allow you maximum flexibility, and prevent any missteps or miscues along the way.

No matter what life brings, you'll be ready for it! Have you seen "The Incredibles" movie? You'll be like the super-hero mom, Elasti-girl. A super-hero homeschool parent ready for anything that comes your way!

Remediation is common

I read a statistic recently that 1/3 of high school graduates require remedial help in college. One third of them aren't really ready for college! You can do MUCH BETTER than public schools, just by making sure your kids are ready for college. Aiming for college early can improve their chances of getting into college AND their chances at significant financial aid.

If you fail to prepare them, college is still possible; it's just more painful - financially and academically. Even if you can't seem to get prepared in one area, keep working with the other areas. They can still receive remedial help in college, but you can provide them the best possible preparation in other areas.

Always be prepared

My children were well prepared for college, and you can prepare your children for college as well! Parents can provide a college preparation during high school for every student, which can benefit every child. Even if they don't go to college, they'll be well prepared for life and their civic responsibilities. Plus, if they ever change their mind and decide to go to college, they will have a much easier time getting in.

On the other hand, some parents know early on that their children are college bound. For them, a college prep education can influence the quality of the colleges they get admitted to, and improve the quantity of financial aid they receive. College preparation can benefit everyone!

But HOW? How do you do it?

In the next chapter, we will go over exactly HOW to plan a rigorous curriculum. You'll learn what courses to teach, and how many of which kind! It will really go a LONG way in helping you plan for college admission, whether you think college is a slam-dunk sure choice, or even if this is just your don't-mess-up and be-prepared plan!

FEATURED RESOURCE:

If you are loving this Ebook, you will want to visit my Freebies section of my website: homehighschoolhelp.com/freebies. There you will find valuable training for creating transcripts and records, and how to homeschool effectively and affordably. It is a great place to get started on your homeschool high school adventure.

"You have provided so much helpful information so many of my questions have been dissolved. I want to put into practice many of the things I have learned so far over the summer. I now am a more confident retired GM dad overseeing my two sons learning choices knowing that the HomeScholar is a mouse click away! Thank you again for the quantity and quality of information you are providing to homeschoolers." - Raymond in Michigan

Mistake 2: Failing to Plan High School Courses

In the last chapter, you learned why aiming for college will provide the best education for your child. They will either go to college and need the college preparation, or they WON'T go to college, and their homeschool becomes perhaps the only formal education they receive. You learned that college preparation is LIFE preparation, especially since you don't know what the future holds. You want to homeschool like the Boy Scouts, and always "be prepared."

You're probably wondering, though, about the big HOW. How can you do it? How can a humble homeschool be like a high power "college prep" high school? That's the focus of this chapter! The second biggest mistake parents make in homeschool high school is not planning high school courses. I'm going to tell how to do that, so you can avoid this trap.

Check your state's requirements

First, during eighth and ninth grade, find out the homeschool requirements in your state. Requirements vary widely and can change yearly, so it's impossible to know without checking it out for yourself. Check with your state homeschool organizations to find out the requirements. A simple Google search for the name of your state plus "homeschool organization" is all you need to do. Find the requirements, then develop a plan to meet them. There are some states that don't require specific courses from homeschoolers. In that case, make sure you meet the legal requirements of your state law, but focus your course selection on college requirements - again, it allows for maximum flexibility in the future.

Meet college admission requirements

What exactly are college admission requirements? There is no "right" answer to that, because every college has their own requirements! There are some generalizations about college preparation, though, so let me share those. In general, the recommended courses to take in high school include 4 years of English, 3 or 4 years of math, 3 to 4 years of social studies, 3 years of science including one lab science, 2 to 3 years of a single foreign language, 2 years of PE, 1 year of fine arts, and enough electives to make 24 or more high school credits. Review the common college requirements for classes to see what courses are expected. In every area of high school college prep course work, make sure that you are teaching your students right at their level.

Exceed requirements for fun!

One of the benefits of homeschooling is its efficiency - it allows plenty of time for fun! Many of the things teenagers do for fun can actually be used as high school courses! The fun things your child likes can be wonderful educational electives and additional foundational courses that beef up their transcript. (I have some great ideas on how to make a winning homeschool transcript that I'll share later in this Ebook.)

The "basics" cover a multitude of weaknesses

Focus on reading, writing, and math! If you cover the basics, you can't stray far from a great college preparation. Many students who go to college need remedial help with the basics. If your student has a solid foundation in the basics, then you're successful! The ability to read, write and do math will allow your student to catch up quickly if and when they are decide to pursue higher education.

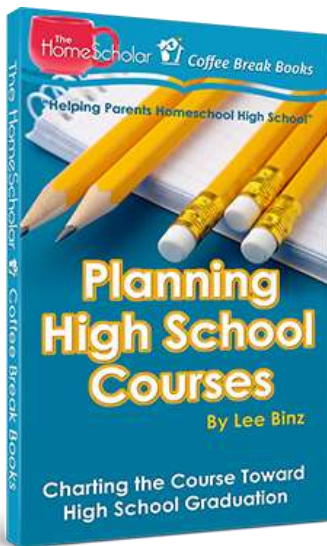

Review your plan yearly and adjust as needed

A quick yearly review can keep you on track with high school. Each year you can make decisions for what is right at the time, but the yearly review will give you the larger overview of high school. The yearly review will remind you that THIS is the year you need to start a foreign language, that this is your last chance for a lab science, or give you the final impetus to complete an art course. Review your plan yearly while you enjoy a lifestyle of learning.

Conclusion

Colleges will know that you have done a great job planning high school courses when your student takes the college admission exams. In order to succeed, then, you need to know a little about those tests. What are they, when do you take them, and why? That will be the focus of our next chapter.

FEATURED RESOURCE

Check out my book, Planning High School Courses. This book is the first my “Coffee Break Book” series published on Amazon. Designed especially for parents who don’t want to spend hours reading a 400-page book on homeschooling high school, this series combines my practical and friendly approach with detailed, but easy-to-digest information, perfect to read over a cup of coffee at your favorite coffee shop. Parents like you have loved these short-and-sweet books that are easy to read in one sitting.

“This book is very helpful for those considering homeschooling (planning ahead), for homeschool parents/students to walk through together before/during high school, and for those who intend to go onto college after high school. It is in depth, engaging, and thought provoking....as well as inspirational. Homeschool parents will feel more prepared and armed with helpful information, enabling them to write out high school courses and adjust as needed. The end result will be a well-rounded education filled with all the things important to the parents and the student.

- Lisa K. Hydock

"I have benefited from Lee Binz's knowledge and experience in homeschooling high school. I have a few of her ebooks, read her blog articles, emailed her with questions (which she answers) and I feel she is a friend, even though we have never met. This book is another shot in the arm. She is a cheerleader for the faint-hearted, a counselor to those with specific questions, and generally guides a homeschool mom through practical ways of designing a transcript or choosing curriculum.

This is not a daunting book by any stretch. I have read other "how-to" books on this subject and become overwhelmed. Lee is not that way. She is realistic. The most helpful advice is the "delight-directed learning" concept. Let life be their teacher. Whatever they enjoy doing can be a class.

You can read this book in an hour or less, about as much time as it takes to enjoy a cup of coffee and a refill. And I think Lee would appreciate that! Thanks to the author for another helpful resource."

~ Becky on Amazon

Mistake 3: Ignoring High School Tests

The third biggest mistake that parents make is failing to prepare their children for the college admission exams! Today we'll discuss these standard high school tests.

The GREAT NEWS is that these tests can demonstrate that your kids know enough to thrive in college! The standard college admissions exams make for great external documentation that you have produced educated students.

On the other hand, these high school tests can cause stress for parents AND students. They are a confusing group of acronyms, and very intimidating when you don't know much about them. What test do you take when, and how do you know? Sometimes homeschool parents become overwhelmed at the prospect of preparing for these tests. They may assume "if I ignore them, they might go away." This is a huge mistake. The standard high school tests do not need to frighten you. Arm yourself with information and a little preparation, and your student can sail through these milestones and get great results.

This chapter will give you some tools and resources you can use to begin getting familiar with these standard tests.

Most answers to your high school testing questions can be found on two websites: CollegeBoard.org and ACT.org. The College Board provides the SAT®, AP®, CLEP®, SAT Subject Tests™ PSAT™ and PSAT/NMSQT® exams. The ACT provides the ACT®, PreACT® exams. Both sites have a wealth of information on high school test preparation.

The first test

The first standardized test you will likely experience in high school is the PSAT/NMSQT® which is like a Practice SAT® or the Pre-SAT®. Your student can take the PSAT™ 10 in 10th grade for fun, but only the PSAT/NMSQT® taken in 11th grade will count toward the National Merit Scholarship. It's only offered once each year, so it's easy to let it slip past you. Register for the test before September of your student's junior year.

College admission exams

Next come the college admission tests, the SAT® and ACT®. They are often taken in the spring of 11th grade and repeated only if necessary. Both are college admission tests, and most colleges will accept either one.

Subject tests

Next you can take some time to think about additional subject tests to measure knowledge in specific areas. SAT Subject Tests™ are best taken immediately after you complete each subject. So, for example, take the SAT Subject Tests™ in French right after you finish studying French.

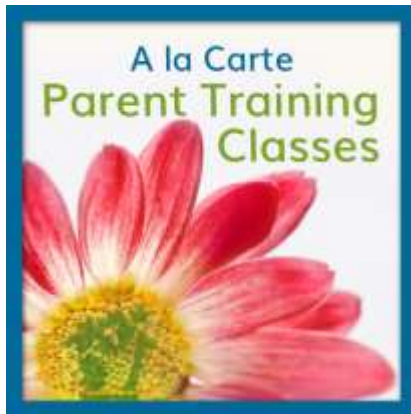

Consider taking AP® exams when you finish courses as well. They are more intensive subject tests that will determine if you know as much as a college student in that subject. Sure they are hard, but they can earn college credit! CLEP® exams are similar to AP®, because they also measure a college amount of learning.

For more information on subject tests, read my free Ebook, "High School Subject Tests Simply Explained."

Answers may vary

Ask colleges which tests they will accept and prefer, because it varies widely by college! To be honest, though, colleges want more than just classes and test scores. In the next chapter we'll be talking about the other things you need to provide.

FEATURED RESOURCE:

I offer a parent training course, called “High School Testing” that covers this topic in much greater depth. It is one of my Parent Training A la Carte courses offered on my website. Each course has a 1 to 2-hour training webinar with extensive resources on the topic.

"This information is so much more than I ever could have hoped for from anyone! You're truly providing a wonderful service. I had this little voice in my head telling me I needed to keep great records through middle school, so I have been doing it right along. Glad to know it can work for his high school transcripts. Thank you for your words of wisdom. Know you've helped yet another 'worry wort' mom!!" ~Jennifer in Florida

"Thank you for taking the time to talk with me today. I will continue to educate myself and check out all the links you emailed me. I absolutely appreciate and love your service. You are the answer to my prayer on where to begin to learn about homeschooling high school. Thank you," ~ Tracie in Michigan

Mistake 4: Failing to Develop Your Student's Area of Passion

We have talked about the importance of gearing your homeschool toward college, and how course selection and standardized tests can influence your successful college admission, if your children decide to go to college. Did you know that colleges care about things other than courses and tests? The fourth biggest mistake parents make is not encouraging the unique gifts of their children. This chapter will focus on developing the non-academic passions of your student. In the push toward academic excellence, some parents may forget this aspect of their student's development.

This is a mistake that can hurt your children's development as well as their college chances.

Focus on character

You want your children to have good character and strong moral fiber. You want your kids to be well-rounded, and the colleges want that too! What you do to shape their characters can only help them in the preparation for college and for life!

Encourage your child to volunteer for community service. Consider employment, internships or apprenticeships. Encourage activities like sports, music, art, and other experiences. Follow their interests as they grow older, instead of having them follow yours. Homeschooling is such an efficient way to educate your children; you will find that you have ample time for both academics as well as the pursuit of their passion.

Colleges love passion

Colleges love to see kids who are passionate about something. This is the "secret sauce" in the college admission recipe! They can see this elusive "passion" in extracurricular activities that students continue through all four years of high school. Colleges prefer to see students who focus on one or two areas to specialize in, rather than dabbling in a little of everything. Development of passion is an important aspect of college planning for all students, not just the gifted and talented.

Academic and non-academic specialization

Sometimes a child might specialize in something academic, like a topic in history or science. Other times their interests might be non-academic. They may love social services, or develop their own business. Wherever their passion lies, allow them the time and ability to pursue it. Many times their interests can (and should!) be put on the transcript, but not always. Sometimes it will simply be a glowing star on their activity list.

Like so many other things about college preparatory high school, specialization is important, whether children go to college or not! It can help shape them into great citizens, as they seek a career fit according to their interests.

The missing ingredient

But what if you successfully avoided all of these mistakes. Is it still possible to "drop the ball" with your homeschool?

Unfortunately, the answer is "yes" - if you fall into the trap that we'll discuss in the next chapter. As a hint, this is the area that happens to be my specialty! You can probably figure out what it is if you read the testimonial at the bottom of this page. That's right; it is the DREADED Homeschool Transcript!

Don't worry, though it's not too scary. The truth is that most of my clients first approach me with questions about record keeping. It seems to be what every parent of high school students is stressed about.

Our next chapter will include much more about record keeping and transcripts. In the meantime, rest assured that you can do this, and I can help you succeed!

FEATURED RESOURCE:

Identifying passion can be difficult, and it's something that I deal with frequently in my Gold Care Club. Homeschooling high school is serious business and the stakes for your children's future are high. I have created an online support system for all parents who are committed to homeschooling their kids through graduation. The HomeScholar Gold Care Club is like a 24/7 high school support group and includes training, templates, planning guides, and personal coaching that will make your journey through high school successful and rewarding. Check it out today!

"I just wanted to say "thank you SO much" once again for all your help and input. I don't know if this adequately expresses how appreciated your wise counsel is and what a help it's been to me. I would be fumbling and procrastinating if I had not ordered your Total Transcript Solution and become a member of your Gold Care Club. I'm so glad my husband said OK to letting me stay on as a member. It's funny that you would be impressed that we are visiting colleges, because, really, without your training, I'd probably be going along with our day-to-day homeschool business, with college in the back of my mind, but not proactively preparing. I cannot tell you how much I have learned from you and your materials--I just wish I knew all this going into freshman year instead of senior year.

But then I started perusing the Gold Care site, emailing and talking with you, ordering other materials, etc., which all has served to get me planning and moving toward accomplishing some goals that needed to be addressed. I feel as if I have had a crash course in college admissions, and now I am so into it, burning the midnight oils nearly every night. I have learned SO MUCH from your materials. You have been more helpful than I can express in jumpstarting me and educating me every step of the way. So, I just wanted to say a very sincere thank you for being there for me and all of us who need a hand to hold as we navigate these uncharted waters."

-Ann in Connecticut

"I spent an entire morning perusing Lee's Gold Club Care materials, and I was thoroughly impressed by breadth and depth of information she provides. As a busy homeschooler, you don't have time to spend hours upon hours conducting research about high school. Take advantage of the work Lee has done for you to prepare how-to videos, provide information on standardized tests and college scholarships, create college preparation guides, give curriculum advice, share links to the web's best homeschool resources, and write articles that are so amazingly informative, I had to return to the Gold Care Club again... and again... and again..."

~Carletta Sanders "Successful Homeschooling"

Mistake 5: Forgetting about High School Records

The first four "errors" we discussed are frequently made, but easily corrected. Now you know about aiming for college, planning high school courses, taking tests, and emphasizing specialization. In this chapter, we are going to deal with the biggie - the dreaded homeschool records. Keeping homeschool records is intimidating for everyone, whether or not you consider yourself an organized person. I know because I am very organized and homeschool record keeping was something I procrastinated about for way too long.

In this chapter, I will share with you the "what," the "why" and the "how" of homeschool records management.

Keep high school records

You need a transcript to get into college, and you need to keep records in order to make a transcript. The lesson? Start keeping records, of course! If nothing else, get a giant Rubbermaid tub and start putting things into it, so that you'll have some records to fall back on.

Once you decide what colleges your child will apply to, ask those colleges what high school records they want from you. It can vary significantly, and there is no way to know unless you ask.

What colleges want

A college may only ask for a transcript. Some colleges will also want a simple reading list, while others will want exhaustive course descriptions with grading criteria.

Some college will have very strange and unique requirements. Find out their requirements early so that you can give them what they want.

I always recommend that you keep something from every class in high school - you never know what a college will want. One college asked me for an English paper that I had graded. Another college wanted subject tests in many different areas. Remember, like a boy scout, "always be prepared!"

Don't be denied

One young homeschooler I know was denied admission to college, even though she had wonderful grades from community college and had already earned her A.A. degree. Why? She failed to produce a homeschool transcript! A transcript is part of your child's educational background that you will somehow have to provide.

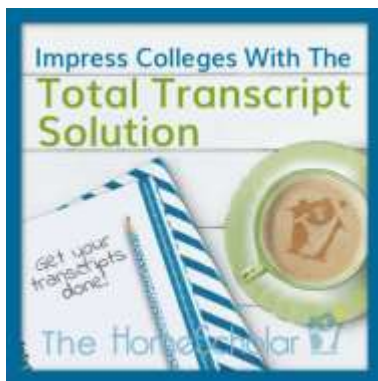

At the very end of homeschooling, at the end of senior year, remember to send the college a final transcript that includes graduation date, final grades and grade point average. The transcript you submit for college admission needs to have those final details once they graduate!

Make a transcript

If your children will be going to college, the truth is you will need to make a transcript. Of course, it's easy for me to say "make a transcript on your home computer using a Word or Excel Document." It's another thing to actually get that done.

FEATURED RESOURCE

So, how do you create a wonderful homeschool transcript that the colleges will love? And how did a procrastinator like me end up producing homeschool documents that AMAZED the colleges? The good news is I have developed a comprehensive resource that goes into great depth on how to create a wonderful homeschool transcript that the colleges will love. "The HomeScholar Total Transcript Solution" will save you incredible amounts of time, money and frustration by showing how to accomplish this dreaded task "the easy way."

With the training, tools and personal coaching you receive, you'll be able to produce an amazing transcript at home, without spending thousands on accreditation agencies or certified teachers. Best of all, you can do it without altering your successful homeschool!

"Hi Lee, Thanks so much for the work you do. I have read the 5 Mistakes and started on the Total Transcript Solution. You have certainly eased most of my fears about the transcript part of the high school years. Thanks again for your enthusiasm in sharing with us your experiences. You have brought light in a dark area of homeschooling through the high school years. I've loved all the information you have given us on your site. I'm so much more confident now about the process of transcripts than I was before purchasing your product and the downloads on your site. The information has been worth a Million Bucks!"

~ Stacy in Georgia

"Your transcripts and records were the best organized and documented I have seen"

~ Bryan Jones, Associate Director of Admissions, Seattle Pacific University

Mistake 6 (Bonus Blunder!): Not Celebrating Success!

I've talked about all five of the biggest mistakes parents make when homeschooling high school! There is one more mistake I'd like to mention as we close this Ebook – a bonus, if you will. The last mistake that parents make is not celebrating their student's successes! When you finish high school, remember to provide some sort of "closing ceremonies" for this long series of Olympic events we call homeschooling!

Finish your high school transcript so that you can have a record of their accomplishments, whether they go to college or not. Give them a high school diploma to show they are a high school graduate.

Have a graduation party, and show the world how proud you are! Sometimes these graduation celebrations will involve getting senior portraits, so you can send a picture of the graduate to all your friends and family. At our party, we invited all our friends from church and community, as well as family members. We bought a cap and gown for our graduates, which they wore for the party. I served a buffet and we had cake and ice cream. My husband gave a short speech and we presented their high school diplomas in our back yard. We took tons of pictures, but we took with us even more memories. Provide a memorable, meaningful experience for your teens so they know they have achieved a real milestone!

I've enjoyed sharing with you some of my "lessons learned" about homeschooling high school. I hope they have been helpful to you. I look forward to helping you homeschool through high school with confidence.

FEATURED RESOURCE

A funny thing happened at our homeschool graduation that was the seed for The HomeScholar ministry. When my homeschool friends spotted the comprehensive homeschool records that I had put together for each boy (which, of course, I displayed proudly), they went ga-ga! These were the records that were integral to our boys both winning full-tuition scholarships to their first choice university. My friends said “how did you do that!” and “you HAVE to teach me!” The end result of those conversations is my Comprehensive Record Solution. This was the single most important strategy we employed to gain college admission and win those juicy scholarships. Since then, it has helped hundreds of families do likewise. You owe it to yourself to check it out today.

“I have been following your advice for 3 years now! Last year I leaped into the Gold Care Club with the purchase of the Comprehensive Record Solution. I am so thankful for your willingness to mentor the homeschool community. My family has just gone through the college application process for the first time. Thanks to you, I felt very aware of what to expect, and confident in our coursework, preparation and transcript.

We sent a full package, with a cover letter, school profile, table of contents, transcript and course descriptions to each college our daughter applied to, though none required anything other than the transcript. Her top three college choices have already sent acceptance letters with initial scholarship offers based on GPA and test scores. As a homeschooling mother, teacher, tutor and guidance counselor, I truly appreciate all you do! ”
