

The GSL: The 2000 Most useful words in the English language.

The General Service List (GSL) (West, 1953) is a set of 2,000 words selected to be of the greatest "general service" to learners of English. They are not the most common 2,000 words, though frequency was one of the factors taken into account in making the selection. Each of the 2,000 words is a headword representing a word family that is only loosely defined in West. Frequency numbers are given, derived from Thorndike and Lorge (1944). Frequency data is also given for the various meanings of words. This list has had a wide influence for many years, serving as the basis for graded readers as well as other material. Texts based on the GSL are still on sale, but the list itself is out of print. A fuller discussion of the GSL, and word lists in general, can be found in Nation (1990, pp 21-24) and Carter and McCarthy (1988, Ch. 1)

The list given here was created by John Bauman and Brent Culligan in early 1995. We wanted a version of the GSL ranked in frequency order. In order to address the above problems, we adapted two authorities. To determine which words to include as forms related to a headword, we used the standard set out in Bauer and Nation (1995). This article uses various criteria to group derived forms into word families. Related words are ranked into levels. Words related by levels 1 to 4 are grouped under a headword on this list, and the frequency numbers are added. To determine the frequency of a words, we used the frequency numbers from the Brown Corpus (Francis and Kucera, 1982). Using these criteria, the GSL ends up as 2284 words.

On the "next page" is the list of 2,284 words. It is in frequency order, with one word per line. Each line contains the following: rank number-space-frequency number-space-word
Note:

The frequency number represents the number of occurrences of that word and its related forms in the 1,000,000 words of the Brown corpus.
