

Looking for truth or dare questions? The truth or dare game is a classic party game of embarrassment. Groups of people gather to ask one another "truth or dare?" The person picks either truth or dare. And if they pick truth, they must answer a question prompted by the "game head" honestly. Or if they pick dare, they must complete an embarrassing task. Ask the following truth or dare questions to have a fun evening with friends.

How to Play Truth or Dare

To play truth or dare, gather a group of friends in a small circle. The "game head" is the person who prompts the person with the truth or dares questions. As the game head, ask the person to your right, "truth or dare?" The person to your right must pick either truth or dare. In truth or dare, a "game head" can be referred to as the dare-master. This is the person who is asking the dare of the group or of a person.

During gameplay, if the player to your right chooses truth, then ask them a truth question. And if the player chooses dare, then present them with an embarrassing task to complete.

An example truth question would be, "What's one thing you've done that you've never told anyone?" And an example dare would be, "Walk on your hands and knees and bark like a dog." Once the dare or the truth is completed, another player gets prompted by the player who completed the challenge.

Completing the round

The round is complete once everyone in the room has received the truth or dare prompt.

Players cannot "skip" to another player. They must complete the truth or dare questions. And if a player decides they don't want to answer the question, they must complete a dare. And another player will get to choose one of their own truth questions or dares.

The best truth or dare questions are those that bring up intimate, personal facts. And embarrass the player in front of the group. Remember, each player is going to get embarrassed.

Players may decide that playing truth or dare isn't exciting enough. Players can choose to play "dirty" truth or dare. Where inappropriate questions and dares are prompted. Truth questions during this gameplay include embarrassing and s#xy questions.

How to Choose Questions

Before playing, print the truth questions and dare questions included below. Review the entire list with the group you're playing with. Ask each player if they are okay with the questions. It's important that each player feels comfortable. Or else there's a risk of players wanting to "skip" their turn. And when players desire to "skip" their turn it can ruin the chemistry of the game.

Review the printed list and cross off questions that the players don't feel comfortable with. Have at least 20-50 questions to choose from before starting the game. The game of truth or dare is a classic party game that can bring joy, conversation, and fun. But only if players are comfortable.

Game Play Tips

Before playing, survey the group. Players who aren't feeling enthusiastic about the opportunity won't be as much fun to play with. And before asking questions, consider everyone's history and their relationship to questions. For example, if someone was cheated on. And they are feeling heartbroken. Then it would be best to skip questions related to cheating.

Keep the game casual and fun. Make sure to consider everyone's feelings. Don't make fun of players who completed dares incorrectly. Or are feeling unenthusiastic.

Unique Ways to Play

The game can be played in a number of ways. The classic game is played amongst a group of friends. Each game-head asks the person to the right to pick either truth or dare. Upon the player picking the prompt they must complete it. And then the rotation continues with the group. With the next player receiving the role as game-head.

A unique way to play this game is to have each player receive the same truth. And then each player must pick their own dare. The players should sit in a circle. And from the list of truths chosen from the beginning of the game, the players must answer the question. Once all players have answered the question, they will pick a dare. That player must complete the dare. And the next round starts with the next question.

Another way to play this game is to play it as a couple. Couples who decide to play this game can play against each other. When two couples are present, the couples can play against one another. But no questions or dares can be said to the other person's spouse. This is a two-on-two style play. The fun of this format is that one couple gets to learn more about the other couple. There are no winners in this format of play.
