Documenting Performance Issues

Document each instance of unacceptable behavior, goals and/or key deliverables by the employee. Record quantifiable data, or the frequency of the issues. (For example, document the number of times the employee was late compared to the number of total work days, or errors that are repeated). Be as detailed as possible by including the time, date and details of each occurrence. Please attach any documents to substantiate your claim or examples if they are available. Make sure they are job related, factual and without opinion.

Performance Review with Employee

- Send an email to the employee requesting a meeting regarding their performance.
- Meet with the employee during a regular work day and during non-lunch hours. Discuss the issue(s) with the employee and explain each section of the prepared report. Please make sure to ask for any questions.
- Ask the employee to explain the reason(s) for the unacceptable performance and strategize possible solutions with the employee.
- Ask the employee to sign the report as an acknowledgement of receipt and include any comments the employee may have.
- Give a copy to the employee.
- Maintain a supervisor copy and provide the original to Human Resources for approval and signature.
- Summarize the conversation into a written improvement plan. The plan should comprise clear expectations with specific, measurable objectives along with a time frame for achievement. The plan should also summarize the mutually agreed-upon solutions for improvement.
- Assign or re-assign training to assist the employee in performance improvement.
- Specify dates for follow up: "Your progress will be reviewed on a regular basis."
- Specify possible consequences if performance standards are not met.

Follow up

- Meet with the employee to review progress as specified.
- Adjust the improvement plan, if necessary, and document both the changes to the plan, the results and the meeting notes.
- Provide updated copies of the improvement plan to Employee and Human Resources.
- If sustained improvement is not achieved, contact Human Resources for guidance before further action is taken.
