The universe beyond the horizon eshed book pdf

There was a time in my life when I was convinced that aliens were real, UFOs were alien space crafts, and the government was keeping it a secret. It was a strange time, indeed. It coincided with a phase where I watched every documentary involving UFOs, aliens, and conspiracy theories I could get my hands on. Like Fox Maulder, I wanted to believe. In hindsight, I was too eager to believe. I've since refined my perspective. I still believe there's other intelligent life in the universe. I just don't believe they've come to this planet and are hiding while the government keeps them secret, "Men In Black" style. That's just a fanciful conspiracy theory that makes for great movies and TV shows, but not much else. It's not the part about intelligent aliens I find unbelievable. It's peoples' ability to keep a secret that big that I find so implausible. I don't care how big a conspiracy theory you are. People can't keep secrets, especially big ones. There are legitimate psychological reasons for that. That's just one of the reasons why I don't believe the Haim Eshed, the former Israeli Space security chief, when he says aliens exist and humanity has been in contact with them. In a year like 2020, it would almost be fitting that aliens entered the picture. However, this is one story that warrants more than a little skepticism. In case you missed it, this is what was reported by the Jerusalem Post. Now, it's no disreputable tabloid, but it's not exactly the BBC. The Jerusalem Post: Former Israeli space security chief says aliens exist, humanity not ready Has the State of Israel made contact with aliens?According to retired Israeli general and current professor Haim Eshed, the answer is yes, but this has been kept a secret because "humanity isn't ready."Speaking in an interview to Yediot Aharonot, Eshed - who served as the head of Israel's space security program for nearly 30 years and is a three-time recipient of the Israel Security Award - explained that Israel and the US have both been dealing with aliens for years.And this by no means refers to immigrants, with Eshed clarifying the existence of a "Galactic Federation."The 87-year-old former space security chief gave further descriptions about exactly what sort of agreements have been made between the aliens and the US, which ostensibly have been made because they wish to research and understand "the fabric of the universe." This cooperation includes a secret underground base on Mars, where there are American and alien representatives. These are some remarkable claims, to say the least. It is impossible to overstate the implications here. We're not talking about some scandal involving a politician and an intern. We're talking about the biggest scientific discovery in the history of humanity. The discovery that we're not alone in the universe and there are other alien beings out there would be profound, to say the least. Even in a year like 2020 when we have so many problems to deal with on this planet, such a discovery would have an enormous impact on how we see ourselves and the universe. That's exactly why it's laughable to think that anyone, let alone a vast government conspiracy, could keep such a discovery under wraps. People can keep small secrets to a point, but not secrets this big. That's not just my opinion. There's some actual math behind it. According to Oxford physicist, David Robert Grimes, the large number of people involved in a conspiracy essentially guarantees that it won't stay secret. It takes thousands of people not saying anything to sustain itself, but it only takes one Edward Snowden to expose it. For something like intelligent aliens, it would be even harder to suppress. Even if they're advanced and intelligent, they would leave traces, especially if they were nearby. That would be difficult to hide and even harder to keep quiet on a global scale. This is a world that can't even agree on the metric system. How could we, with all our different agendas and politics, all agree to keep a secret this big? I won't say it's completely impossible. I don't like being that absolute in my statements. I'll just say it's exceedingly improbable. I'd put it right up there with the sun being made of radioactive cheese. However, if that's still not convincing enough, there's one other reason why I don't by Mr. Eshed's statement. It also has nothing to do with my position on government conspiracies and why people can't keep secrets. The man is trying to sell something. Specifically, he's trying to sell a book. In the same article in which he makes his bold claim, there's this little tidbit that the headline doesn't mention. Eshed provided more information in his newest book, The Universe Beyond the Horizon - conversations with Professor Haim Eshed, along with other details such as how aliens have prevented nuclear apocalypses and "when we can jump in and visit the Men in Black." The book is available now for NIS 98. For me, that's the reddest of red flags. The man is selling a book and this bold claim is basically a sales pitch. He's making this ground-breaking revelation that could potentially change the world. Then, he directs people to buy his book to learn more. Anyone who has ever dealt with public relations or sales people should immediately realize what's going on. The rule of thumb is that if it looks like a sales gimmick, chances are that's exactly what it is. This certainly matches that criteria. Even Fox Maulder would be skeptical at this point. Honestly, what's more likely? Could it be that a retired space security chief is finally breaking his silence and revealing to the world that thousands of people have been keeping this secret about aliens for decades? Or could it just be a man making a bold, but false claim that he hopes will help him sell more books? I know the Fox Maulder in us all wants to believe, but sometimes Occam's Razor just cuts too deep. I still believe aliens are out there and I hope they visit us one day. I just don't think they've arrived yet. Chances are, when they do arrive, we'll know and no conspiracy will be necessary. When viral reports began circulating a week or two ago about Haim Eshed, the 87 year-old former head of Israel's Defense Ministry's space directorate, I suspected it was all a hoax. And not a clever one. I didn't rush to Snopes because Snopes is not even in the ballpark of unbiased information. Like Wikipedia, they carry water for the mainstream, denying anything that casts doubt on the infallibility of your TV set. But just now I happen to click on Snopes feeble attempt at debunking Haim Eshed's statements and realized a few surprising things: 1. The man exists. 2. Haim Eshed truly was the head of the Israelis Defense Ministry's "space directorate" for 30 years. 3. He really does have a book coming out, "The Universe Beyond the Horizon — Conversations with Professor Haim Eshed." (I still can't find it. Please let me know if you know where I can buy a copy in English.) 4. As far as Snopes has been able to determine, Haim Eshed really did make claims that humans have made contact with aliens, there are underground bases on Mars, and unnamed officials in the United States have signed "an agreement with the aliens." 5. This story really did appear in an Israeli newspaper, "Yediot Aharonot" (The Jerusalem Post) and was commented upon by that newspaper on Facebook on December 4. Snopes says this Facebook quote is real: "The UFOs have asked not to publish that they are here, humanity is not ready yet. Trump was on the verge of finding out, but the aliens in the Galactic Federation say: Wait, let the winds calm down first. They do not want mass hysteria to develop in us. They want to make us sane first and understand. They have waited until today, for humanity to evolve and reach a stage where we will generally understand what space and spaceship are." I should mention that the geniuses at Snopes begin their objective debunking with this photograph: How could anyone take Snopes seriously when they feel free to "poison the well" with humerus ridicule? Do they think this sets the stage for their superior objectivity and intellect? Giggling about UFOs shows a level of bias that's outdated since official "disclosure" began in 2017. Snopes' apparent ignorance should cause them embarrassment. In their "real world" report, Snopes reminds us that NASA is still looking for extraterrestrial life. Finding this relevant would require the naïve assumption that NASA is honest. More likely, NASA pretends that UFOs don't exist because they will lose funding the moment the folks operating the UFOs are identified. Limiting the scope of scientific exploration through biased funding is the rule in science, not the exception. This is true in all branches of mainstream science from medicine to space weather. Trying an appeal to authority, Snopes makes this statement, "It should also be noted that these claims [of Haim Eshed] do not have the support of the scientific community." That's changing. The United States government has admitted to the public that UFOs are real. The DOD claims the aerial phenomena are enigmatic. And here's a scientist, Dr. Michael P. Masters (a professor of biological anthropology specializing in human evolutionary anatomy, archaeology, and biomedicine) who has now published a science-based book on his astonishing interpretation of UFOs. That's the good professor selling t-shirts in the featured image above. He's not in the same league with Haim Eshed, in my limited view of things, but I greatly respect his courage and honesty. Optimistically, it may not be long before the US government funds mainstream science in the study of unidentified flying objects and other unidentified aerial phenomena. The part of the statement by the 87 year-old Haim Eshed that I find particularly interesting is the alleged opinion of the aliens that humans need to "understand what space and spaceship are." This implies there may be something profound about these simple concepts... What is space? At the moment, I suspect space is like a three-dimensional computer monitor made of small Planck-sized 3-D pixels which are intelligently controlled from beyond our space-time Universe. This might provide an answer to the question, "What medium exists to propagate light waves?" I doubt it's "ether." More likely it's a medium capable of responding to information transmitted to it, like a 3-D monitor (conceptually like the holodeck of Star Trek). What is a spaceship? I suspect the answers to this lies on a continuum. Some spaceships are likely 3-D pieces of technology from hidden sources on Earth or other planets within the Universe. Other "spaceships" are likely advanced hologram technology owned and kept secret by the US Air Force who enjoys annoying the Navy with their new toys. Other "spaceships" may conceivably originate with the being(s) (possibly God or gods) who control the information flow into the 3-D pixels of our space-time "Universe" or simulation. Also, it's possible that whatever reality undergirds the apparent phenomena of visualized ghosts and the like might also produce "spaceships." (What am I forgetting here?) Fine. Now we get it, Aliens. Can we please have some real disclosure for Christmas? We promise not to panic. Love in 3-D alien pixels, Morrill Talmage Moorehead, MD
