ARGUMENTATIVE ESSAY Topic> Writing and essay prompts are a great learning tool to help you focus on a particular subject or topic and practice writing on that topic using proper sentence structure and development. Writing prompts are meant to open up the imagination as well as the creativity within; to improve these skills you are learning and feel connected to your writing. When you succeed at writing prompts, you will take your writing to a whole new level. Studying Writing prompts How well you are taught and more importantly, the skills you practice in order to gain speed and knowledge. Understanding writing prompts is not all that simple. In fact, many students will not do very good at all because they misunderstood the concept of the writing prompt. Understand your writing prompt. Understanding the prompts will direct your writing in the direction it is supposed to go. Understand your Writing Prompt Before you start, take the time to answer the following questions to help you understand your prompt better. What is the writing form associated with this writing prompt? What is the main reason for this prompt? What information should I include? What are the details or conflicts that I can include? What audience am I targeting? How will my writing style differ from what the audience is expecting? If you answer these questions, you can get a good start on the persuasive paper outlines, which, in its turn, will help you put your thesis together more productively. To begin, simply answer these questions in one sentence. Often, students don't use their writing prompts correctly in their pre-writing, which will ultimately change their end goal. This way will help you in all your writing assignments. The ultimate goal is to improve your writing skills and nye you a+ on paper. How Important is the Writing Form? It's important to know what the correct writing form is before you begin. You need to determine if your writing prompt is narrative, persuasive, or expository. While some writing prompts will be specific, others will not, and you must form your own option of the writing style through the directions given. For example, if your instructions use the word "persuade" then you will most likely want to use a persuasive form of writing. It's better to take the time to observe the details and instructions on writing your assignment correctly than to hurry through it and do it wrong. It just takes a short list like this one below to determine which direction your writing should go in. Look for the following keywords to determine the proper way to write: If you see the words: how, define, compare and contrast, what, or analyze in your essay should be expository If you see the words: why, argue, opinion, convince or persuade in your instructions, your essay should be persuasive If you see the words: tell, imagine, relate, story, or describe in your instructions, your essay should be narrative. Once you learn the keywords, you will know what direction your writing prompts can also be used to help students get ready for the standardized tests. These tests include the ACT and the SAT. Writing prompts are given out according to the age group they are for and often focus on contemporary social problems. It's always a great idea to prepare yourself by keeping up with current events as well as participating in a group discussion. Join a reading group that encourages fiction and nonfiction books with the discussion. Learn to feel more comfortable with your writing part of the test. And yes, free writing may seem silly at first, but it is an amazing way to take your writing skills to a totally new level. Once you master free writing, try a more serious approach. As you should already know, any essay (including SAT paper) is based on the thesis. This is the main statement of any academic work, and if you want to ace your exam, you will have to practice creating compelling thesis statements. Once again - no need to worry. It is easier than it seems at first. The best thesis is: In other words, you have to create a statement that has actual meaning in everyday life - yours, your peers, or the society in general. It should not be too obvious; it should be something people can argue with. And finally, it should be expressed in a sentence - maximum, two.
