

UPDATED WITH A NEW INTRODUCTION, AUTHOR Q&A,
AND A FOREWORD BY ARIANNA HUFFINGTON

"The Go-Giver is the most important parable about business—and life—of our time."
—ADAM GRANT, New York Times bestselling author of Give and Take

NATIONAL BESTSELLER

The GO - GIVER

A LITTLE STORY ABOUT A
POWERFUL BUSINESS IDEA

Bob Burg and John David Mann

“Deeply heartfelt and meditative, The Go-Giver is filled with insights. More important, it accomplishes what few business books do—it reminds us of our own core humanity.”

—Ori Brafman, New York Times bestselling coauthor,
The Starfish and the Spider, Sway, and Click

“At the heart of The Go-Giver is a philosophy—actually, a way of being—that will dramatically increase your business, enrich your life, and make an extraordinary mark on the world around you.”

—Gary Keller, founder and chairman of the board, Keller Williams Realty, Intl; New York Times bestselling author, The ONE Thing

“Burg and Mann have crafted a business parable that is drawing comparisons with Dr. Spencer Johnson’s wildly popular 1998 book, Who Moved My Cheese? . . . The world always needs a fresh approach to its most important messages. The Go-Giver is a great way to spread a positive and enriching message.”

—Soundview Executive Book Alert

“Most people don’t have the guts to buy this book, never mind the will to follow through and actually use it. But you do. And I’m certain that you’ll be glad you did.”

—Seth Godin, author of Tribes and Linchpin

“The Go-Giver has created such a buzz CEOs are buying it in bulk for their entire organizations. [The book] taps into a universal truth: Giving and receiving aren’t mutually exclusive ideals.”

—Huffington Post

“The Go-Giver is the best business parable since The Greatest Salesman in the World and The One Minute Manager. This book shows that putting the other person first is the key to business success and personal fulfillment. It’s also the most profitable.”

—Pat Williams, author, Leadership Excellence; senior vice president, the Orlando Magic

“The Go-Giver is filled with timeless truths practically presented that will positively transform every reader; it’s a brilliant and easily read guide to doing good and doing well.”

—Rabbi Daniel Lapin, author, Business Secrets from the Bible and Thou Shall Prosper

“Trust is established when you act in the best interests of others. This terrific book wonderfully illuminates this and many other principles of contribution, abundance, service, and success. In a style both engaging and insightful, The Go-Giver delivers a very powerful message.”

—Stephen M. R. Covey, New York Times
bestselling author, The Speed of Trust

“Our deepest desire is to be taught and transformed by wisdom presented in its simplest form. Burg and Mann have mastered storytelling by returning us to the sacredness of our ancestors—giving, living, and thriving while expressing passion for common sense.”

— Temple Hayes, author, When Did You Die?; spiritual leader and difference maker

“The greatest leader is a servant leader. The Go-Giver tells a great story about how to serve your way to success.”

—John Addison, past co-CEO, Primerica, Inc.

“The Go-Giver is a lovely reminder to us all that the world is abundant and rewards those who act with a generosity of spirit.”

—Lois P. Frankel, Ph.D., author, See Jane Lead
and Nice Girls Don't Get the Corner Office

“Similar to Mitch Albom's Tuesdays with Morrie, providing wisdom and insight on how to be more successful.”

—TheStreet.com

“The Go-Giver does everything I would wish a good book to do. The story captured me from the very beginning to the very end. The lessons touched home again and again. Good books do that. This book does that. Read it to the very end.”

—Michael E. Gerber, New York Times bestselling author, The E-Myth

“The Go-Giver should be handed out to every new college student as required reading.”

—Angela Loehr Chrysler, CEO, Team National, Inc.;
director, National Companies, Inc.

“A classy and timeless read.”

—Jones Loflin, coauthor, Juggling Elephants

“A quick read in the spirit of The Greatest Salesman in the World and The One Minute Manager. Burg and Mann write with a simple, informal style that offers a working-person’s interpretation of the old adage ‘give and you shall receive.’”

—Publishers Weekly

“The Go-Giver is a gem, filled with uncommon wisdom and five-star insights. A must-read book by anyone who wants to get more out of life.”

—Gerhard Gschwandtner, founder and publisher, Selling Power

“The Go-Giver has had an enormous influence on how I do business and live my life, and I’m honored, humbled, and grateful to share the Five Laws with others. Thank you for helping to make this world a better place, and me a better person!”

—Harriett E. Dominique, senior vice president, Corporate Responsibility and Community Affairs, USAA

“Burg and Mann have demonstrated that adding value to people’s lives is the way to climb the ladder of financial success. Focus on adding value to others and your own success will skyrocket.”

—Fran Tarkenton, Hall of Fame quarterback;
founder and CEO, GoSmallBiz.com

“I don’t know that I’ve ever read a more powerful book about succeeding in business and life.”

—Gloria Loring, singer and actress; author,
Coincidence Is God’s Way of Remaining Anonymous

“The Go-Giver hits a bull’s-eye on the subject of success in business and life. Burg and Mann clearly understand how helping others succeed will help you succeed. I highly recommend this book.”

—Dr. Ivan Misner, bestselling author, Masters of Success; founder, BNI

“For those who enjoy business parables, The Go-Giver is one of the more memorable books to come along.”

—Editor’s blog, Soundview Executive Book Summaries

“These five simple principles will help you achieve your goals and fulfill your dreams!”

—Brian Tracy, author, The Psychology of Achievement

“Short and sweet, this business parable packs a punch with its timely message of generosity. In our fast-paced world, we all need to be reminded of the genuine human spirit that builds the foundation for success. You’ll love this book!”

—Nido Qubein, president, High Point University

“This book is exactly what is meant by the phrase ‘Great things come in small packages.’ The messages within these pages are treasures you will want to read over and over and share with all those you care about. These are the true keys to success in every aspect of life.”

—Tom Hopkins, author, How to Master the Art of Selling

“A cross between Jonathan Livingston Seagull and The 7 Habits of Highly Effective People . . . an uplifting, quick read of a book that will appeal to customers who want to bring more heart and a holistic sense of mission to their livelihoods.”

—Retailing Insight

“The Go-Giver taps into the secret that the mega-successful already know: Personal wealth is the by-product of making the world a better place.”

—Paul Zane Pilzer, bestselling author, The Wellness Revolution;
two-time U.S. presidential economic adviser

“This book makes a good first impression, and an even better second impression when you realize that the parable is deeper than you first thought.”

—Life Insurance Selling

“Burg and Mann have taken the complicated game of business and infused it with clarity and purpose.”

—Philip E. Harriman, CLU, ChFC, president,
2007 Million Dollar Round Table

“Deftly written and thoroughly reader-friendly . . . informed and informative as well as inspired and inspiring.”

—Midwest Book Review

“The Five Laws are beautiful in their simplicity, but it is Mann and Burg’s powerful storytelling that elevates them from the simply motivational to the truly inspirational.”

—Scott Allen, columnist, Fastcompany.com; coauthor,
The Virtual Handshake

The Go-Giver

By Bob Burg and John David Mann

Go-Givers Sell More

The Go-Giver Leader

Also by Bob Burg

Adversaries into Allies: Master the Art of Influence

Endless Referrals: Network Your Everyday Contacts into Sales

The Success Formula

Also by John David Mann

Among Heroes (with Brandon Webb)

The Red Circle (with Brandon Webb)

The Slight Edge (with Jeff Olson)

Take the Lead (with Betsy Myers)

Flash Foresight (with Daniel Burrus)

The Secret Language of Money (with David Krueger, M.D.)

You Call the Shots (with Cameron Johnson)

The Go-Giver

A Little Story About a Powerful Business Idea

Bob Burg and John David Mann

PORTFOLIO / PENGUIN

PORTFOLIO / PENGUIN
An imprint of Penguin Random House LLC
375 Hudson Street
New York, New York 10014
penguin.com

Copyright © 2007, 2015 by Bob Burg and John David Mann
Penguin supports copyright. Copyright fuels creativity, encourages diverse voices, promotes free speech, and creates a vibrant culture. Thank you for buying an authorized edition of this book and for complying with copyright laws by not reproducing, scanning, or distributing any part of it in any form without permission. You are supporting writers and allowing Penguin to continue to publish books for every reader.

Foreword by Arianna Huffington published by arrangement with the author

ISBN 978-1-59184-828-8

Printed in the United States of America

10 9 8 7 6 5 4 3 2 1

Set in Apollo MT Std
Designed by Cassandra Garruzzo

To Mike and Myrna Burg and Alfred and Carolyn Mann, who gave us everything.

CONTENTS

- Foreword by Arianna Huffington xiii
- Introduction xv
- 1 The Go-Getter 1
- 2 The Secret 7
- 3 The Law of Value 19
- 4 The Condition 33
- 5 The Law of Compensation 37
- 6 Serving Coffee 49
- 7 Rachel 53
- 8 The Law of Influence 59
- 9 Susan 69
- 10 The Law of Authenticity 77
- 11 Gus 93
- 12 The Law of Receptivity 97
- 13 Full Circle 109
- 14 The Go-Giver 117
- The Five Laws of Stratospheric Success 123
- Acknowledgments 125
- A Go-Giver Discussion Guide 129
- Q&A with the Authors 135
- About the Authors 149

FOREWORD

Giving, touching others' lives, expanding the circle of our concern to include others, being authentic and being always open to receiving as well as giving. That's not just a children's fairy tale—it's a good description of many of the most amazing people I've encountered.

And while they may live and work in different countries and in different fields, they all share the same core giving philosophy. This book captures that philosophy and shows that it is more than a fable, a parable or a pipe dream. It's real—a path that people can follow in their daily lives.

People want to believe that this is the way the world can work: that living with a focus on others isn't just a nice goal but that it can be a way of life, and can lead to a life that is full, rich and fulfilling. But then, too often, we feel pressured by the voices (both external and internal) of cynicism and resignation, telling us, "It's a dog-eat-dog world out there—you've got to look out for #1."

Too many people think, "Oh, sure, once you've achieved success and financial stability, then you can afford to be a giving person!" But in this book, Bob Burg and John David

FOREWORD

Mann—who, among other things, have given us the term go-giver—tell us that, in fact, being a giving person is how you achieve success in the first place, however you define success.

Too often people hear “be a giver” and think of charities and writing checks, of “giving back” once we have already done well for ourselves. But that’s only one very specific facet of giving. By “be a giver,” Bob and John mean be a giving person, period: one who gives thought, gives attention, gives care, gives focus, gives time and energy—gives value to others.

Not as a quid pro quo, not as a strategy to get ahead, but because it is, in and of itself, a satisfying and fulfilling way to be.

Arianna Huffington

Introduction to the Revised Edition

Not long after The Go-Giver first appeared, we got a letter from a man named Arlin Sorensen. The CEO of an Iowa IT firm, Arlin had organized a Go-Giver-themed summer retreat for more than two hundred peer-group companies. Inspired by the ideas in the book, several conference participants flew out to another state, on their own dime, to help brainstorm solutions for a colleague whose company was on the verge of closure. The firm pulled back from the brink and saw banner profits the following quarter—and the two men who'd done the consulting were surprised to find that what they learned in the process helped boost growth in their own companies, too.

All of which, Arlin told us, was a result of his reading our “little story about a powerful business idea.”

And Arlin wasn't the only one sending us reports like this. People in all sorts of businesses started telling us that our story was changing the way they did things. Chambers of Commerce told us they were adopting Go-Giver precepts as part of their professional code and giving copies of the book to their members to help their businesses become more successful. A fitness club challenged its staff to continually come up with creative improvements in the business based on the book's core principles. A legal firm reported using the book to help more effectively negotiate matrimonial disputes.

INTRODUCTION

The Go-Giver started as a book but soon became a movement. Our hero Joe's struggle to gain an advantage in his business (some "clout and leverage," as he put it) and his encounters with his mentor's counterintuitive principles describing how the world really works ("the more you give, the more you have") seemed to strike a chord—and not only in the world of business. Before long we were hearing from parents, teachers, pastors, and counselors who were using the book in their work, and in their lives, too.

- A high school teacher in Indiana told us he was taking his school's senior class through the book because he found it "better equipped them to do well in the world." He has done it with every graduating class since.
- An executive chef at an exclusive Houston country club started using it to train his management team to reach even higher levels of excellence and member satisfaction.
- A Lithuanian expat in London moved back to her homeland and started her own publishing company just so she could share the book with her compatriots in their own language. "Your book will change our country," she told us.

From book clubs to executive councils, law firms to prayer groups, energy conglomerates to nursing homes, pizza shop managers to graduate school professors, people wrote to tell us how they were using the book. And it wasn't that they were saying they liked it. They were saying something better than that.

INTRODUCTION

They were saying it worked.

Business owners told us the book helped them make their businesses more successful. In some cases, struggling businesses experienced a complete turnaround after implementing the "Five Laws of Stratospheric Success" Joe learns in these pages. Companies large and small started using it to train their sales and customer service teams to generate both more sales and happier customers. People reported using the Five Laws to great effect in their marriages and approach to parenting.

All of the foregoing might seem to suggest that the "secrets" in The Go-Giver must be startlingly new and original. They aren't, of course. The ideas here are as old as humanity. One of the messages we hear most often is some variation of "This is how I always thought (or always hoped) things worked. . . . I just never quite knew how to put it into words." When these readers crack open the pages of Joe's adventure, they tell us, they discover something they always knew somewhere inside themselves: that while the world may at times appear to be a dog-eat-dog place, there is actually a set of much kinder and vastly more powerful principles operating beneath the surface of casual appearances.

But don't take our word for it.

After reading what Joe and his mentor Pindar have to say, we invite you to take the next step and explore it for yourself.

INTRODUCTION

Follow Pindar's Condition: Test every law you read here and see what happens. "Not by thinking about it," as Pindar tells Joe in chapter 2, "not by talking about it, but by applying it in your life."

Enjoy—and our best wishes for your stratospheric success.

Bob Burg and John David Mann

October 2015

1: The Go-Getter

If there was anyone at the Clason-Hill Trust Corporation who was a go-getter, it was Joe. He worked hard, worked fast and was headed for the top. At least, that was his plan. Joe was an ambitious young man, aiming for the stars.

Still, sometimes it felt as if the harder and faster he worked, the further away his goals appeared. For such a dedicated go-getter, it seemed like he was doing a lot of going but not a lot of getting.

Work being as busy as it was, though, Joe didn't have much time to think about that. Especially on a day like today—a Friday, with only a week left in the quarter and a critical deadline to meet. A deadline he couldn't afford not to meet.

Today, in the waning hours of the afternoon, Joe decided it was time to call in a favor, so he placed a phone call—but the conversation wasn't going well.

"Carl, tell me you're not telling me this . . ." Joe took a breath to keep the desperation out of his voice. "Neil Hansen?! Who the heck is Neil Hansen? . . . Well I don't care what he's offering, we can meet those specs . . . wait—c'mon, Carl, you owe me one! You know you do! Hey, who saved your bacon on the Hodges account? Carl, hang on . . . Carl!”

Joe clicked off the TALK button on his cordless phone and made himself calmly set down the instrument. He took a deep breath.

Joe was desperately trying to land a large account, an account he felt he richly deserved—one he needed, if he wanted to make his third-quarter quota. Joe had just missed his quota in the first quarter, and again in the second. Two strikes . . . Joe didn’t even want to think about a third.

“Joe? You okay?” a voice asked. Joe looked up into the concerned face of his coworker Melanie Matthews. Melanie was a well-meaning, genuinely nice person. Which was exactly why Joe doubted she would survive long in a competitive environment like the seventh floor, where they both worked.

“Yeah,” he said.

“Was that Carl Kellerman on the phone? About the BK account?”

Joe sighed. “Yeah.”

He didn’t need to explain. Everyone on the floor knew who Carl Kellerman was. He was a corporate broker looking for the right firm to handle an account Joe had nicknamed the Big Kahuna, or BK for short.

According to Carl, the boss at Big Kahuna didn’t think Joe’s firm had the “clout and leverage” to put the deal together. Now some character he’d never heard of had underbid and outperformed him. Carl claimed there was nothing he could do about it.

"I just don't get it," Joe said.

"I'm so sorry, Joe," said Melanie.

"Hey, sometimes you eat the bear . . ." He flashed a confident grin, but all he could think about was what Carl had said. As Melanie walked back to her desk, Joe sat lost in thought. Clout and leverage . . .

Moments later he leaped up and walked over to Melanie's desk. "Hey, Mel?"

She looked up.

"Do you remember talking with Gus the other day, something about a big wheel consultant giving a talk somewhere next month? You called him the Captain or something?"

Melanie smiled. "Pindar. The Chairman."

Joe snapped his fingers. "That's it! That's the guy. What's his last name?"

Melanie frowned. "I don't think . . ." She shrugged. "No, I don't think I've ever heard it mentioned. Everyone calls him the Chairman, or just Pindar. Why? You want to go hear the talk?"

"Yeah . . . maybe." But Joe was not interested in some lecture happening a month away. He was interested in only one thing—and that one thing needed to happen by the following Friday, when the third quarter came to an end.

"I was thinking, this guy is a real heavy hitter, right? Charges huge consulting fees, works only for the biggest and best firms? Major clout. I know we could handle the BK account, but I'm gonna need some big guns to win the deal back. I need leverage. Any idea how I can get a line to this Chairman guy's office?"

Melanie looked at Joe as if he were proposing to wrestle a grizzly bear. “You’re just going to call him up?!”

Joe shrugged. “Sure. Why not?”

Melanie shook her head. “I have no idea how to contact him. Why don’t you ask Gus?”

As Joe headed back to his desk, he wondered how Gus had managed to survive this long at Clason-Hill Trust. He never saw him do any actual work. Yet Gus had an enclosed office, while Joe, Melanie and a dozen others shared the open space of the seventh floor. Some said Gus had gotten his office because of seniority. Others said he’d earned it on merit.

According to office rumors, it had been years since Gus had sold a single account, and management kept him on purely out of loyalty. There were also whispers about Gus that went to the other extreme—that he had been super-successful in his younger days and was now an independently wealthy eccentric who stashed his millions away in mattresses while living a pensioner’s lifestyle.

Joe didn’t believe the rumors. He was pretty sure Gus brought in some accounts. But it was hard to picture him as a sales superstar. Gus dressed like a high school English teacher and reminded Joe more of a retired country doctor than of an active businessman. With his relaxed, easy manner, his long, rambling phone conversations with potential clients (conversations that seemed to touch on everything but business) and his erratic, extended vacations, Gus seemed like a relic of times long past.

Hardly a go-getter.

Joe stopped at Gus's open door and knocked softly.

"Come on in, Joe," came the reply.

"So you want to call right now and try to get in to see the man himself?" Gus thumbed carefully through his large Rolodex, found the dog-eared card he was searching for and copied the phone number onto a small slip of paper, which he then handed to Joe. He watched as Joe took the paper and punched in the number on his cordless phone.

"On a Friday afternoon?" Joe grinned. "Yup. I'm going to do exactly that."

Gus nodded thoughtfully. "One thing I have to say about you, Joe, you've got ambition, and I admire that." Gus absent-mindedly fingered a meerschaum pipe as he talked. "If there's anyone on this floor who's a go-getter, it's you."

Joe was touched. "Thanks, Gus." He headed back to his desk.

From behind him, Gus called out, "Don't thank me yet."

After a single ring, Joe was greeted by a cheerful voice belonging to a woman who identified herself as Brenda. He introduced himself, told her he needed to see the Chairman, and then readied himself to parry her stonewalling.

Instead, she shocked him by saying, "Of course he can meet with you. Can you come by tomorrow morning?"

"To—tomorrow?" he stammered. "On a Saturday?!"

"Yes, if that works with you. Is eight o'clock too early?"

Joe was stunned. "Don't . . . ah, don't you need to check with him first?"

"Oh, no," came her unruffled reply. "Tomorrow morning will be fine."

There was a brief silence. Joe wondered if she had him confused with someone else. Someone this Pindar character actually knew. "Ma'am?" he finally managed to say. "You, ah, you know this is my first time meeting with him, right?"

"Of course," she replied cheerfully. "You've heard about his Trade Secret, and you want to learn about it."

"Well, yes, that's it, more or less," he replied. Trade Secret? The man was willing to share his Trade Secret? He could hardly believe his good fortune.

"He'll meet with you one time," continued Brenda. "After that, if you agree to his conditions, he'll want to set up additional appointments to actually show you the Secret."

"Conditions?" Joe was crestfallen. He was sure these "conditions" would involve a stiff consulting fee or retainer he couldn't afford. And even if he could, it might require the kind of high-level credentials Joe certainly didn't have. Was it even worth it to go on? Or should he cut his losses and find a graceful way to back out now?

"Of course," he replied. "Oh, and what are his, ah, conditions, again?"

"You'll have to hear that directly from the Old Man," she said with a giggle.

Joe took down the address she gave him, mumbled his thanks and clicked off the phone. In less than twenty-four hours he was going to meet with—what had she called him?—the Old Man.

And why had she giggled when she said that?

2: The Secret

The next morning Joe arrived at the address Brenda had given him and pulled up into the huge circular drive. He couldn't help being impressed as he parked and looked up at the beautiful stone mansion that stretched up a good four stories in front of him. He gave a low whistle. This was some place. The man had clout, all right.

Joe had done his homework the night before. An hour on the Internet had told him some pretty remarkable things about the person he was about to meet.

The man known as the Chairman had had a very successful career with a wide range of enterprises. Now mostly retired from his own companies, he devoted most of his time to teaching and mentoring others. He was in great demand as a consultant to Fortune 500 CEOs and as a keynote speaker at top-shelf corporate events. He had become something of a legend. One article had dubbed him "the business world's best-kept secret."

"Talk about clout," thought Joe. "Leverage, big time!"

"Joe! Welcome!"

A slender man with neatly combed graying-black hair, a pale blue shirt, light gray jacket and pressed, light gray slacks stood outside the great oak door. Early sixties, Joe guessed, maybe even late fifties. The man's age was one detail the Internet search had not yielded.

His precise net worth was another, but by all accounts, it was stratospheric. The castle that stood before Joe confirmed that impression, as did the man's stately, elegant presence. From his beaming expression, it was clear that his "Welcome!" was genuine and not just a figure of speech.

"Good morning, sir," said Joe. "Thank you for taking the time to see me."

"You're welcome—and thank you, for exactly the same reason." Pindar smiled broadly over his firm handshake. Joe returned a somewhat bewildered smile of his own and wondered, "Why is he thanking me?"

"Let's head over to the terrace for a hot cup of Rachel's famous coffee," said Joe's host as he ushered him onto a small slate path that led around the side of the mansion. "Surprised to be here?"

"Actually, yes," Joe admitted. "I'm just wondering how many business legends would open their homes to a perfect stranger on a Saturday morning."

Pindar nodded as they walked along the path. "Actually, successful people do this all the time. Typically, the more successful they are, the more willing they are to share their secrets with others."

Joe nodded, trying his best to believe that this could possibly be true.

Pindar glanced at him, then smiled again. "Appearances can be deceiving, Joe. In fact, they nearly always are."

They walked for a moment before Pindar continued. "I was sharing a stage once with Larry King—you know, the radio and television interviewer?"

Joe nodded.

"And since he'd interviewed so many famous, successful and powerful people, I thought I'd check my own observations against his. 'Larry,' I asked, 'are your guests as genuinely nice as they seem? Even the real superstars?' He fixed me with a gaze and said, 'Tell you what. The interesting thing is, the bigger they are, the nicer they are.'"

Something about Pindar's warm, raspy voice had put Joe curiously at ease from the first moment he heard it. Now he identified that something: it was a storyteller's voice.

Pindar continued. "Well, Larry thought for a moment about what he'd said, and then he said more. 'I believe that a person can reach a certain level of success without being particularly special. But to get really, really big, to reach the kind of stratospheric success we're talking about, people need to have something on the inside, something that's genuine.'"

As they arrived at the terrace table, Joe glanced around—and just managed not to gasp out loud. Beyond the city stretching below them to the west lay a range of long, rolling mountains, half-shrouded in cottony clouds. The view took Joe's breath away.

They took their seats, and the young woman Pindar had called Rachel appeared with a pot of her "famous" coffee. As she poured cups for both of them, Joe thought, "Susan won't believe it when I tell her about this place." He had told his wife only that he was going to "meet with a potential client." He smiled as he pictured the expression that would light up her face when she heard about his adventure.

"Wow," said Joe. "Larry King, huh? By the way, this coffee is spectacular. Is Rachel's coffee really famous?"

"It is in this home," Pindar said with a smile. "I'm not a betting man, but if I were, you know what I'd bet?"

Joe shook his head.

"I'd bet that one day it will be famous worldwide. Rachel is very special. Been with us for about a year now, but I expect she'll be leaving us before long. I've been encouraging her to open a chain of coffeehouses. Her coffee is too good not to share with the world."

"I can see what you mean." Joe leaned in and adopted his best confidential, just-us-guys-talking manner. "If she could reproduce this on an industrial scale, you two could make a killing." He sat back in his chair and took another sip.

Pindar set his cup down and looked at Joe thoughtfully.

"Actually, Joe, in the brief time we have this morning, that's where I want to begin. You and I are coming from two different directions when it comes to wealth creation. If we're going to take this walk together, we need to start by facing the same direction. If you notice, what I said was 'share her coffee.' What you said was 'make a killing.' Do you see the difference?"

Joe wasn't sure if he did or not, but he cleared his throat and said, "Yes . . . I think so."

Pindar smiled. "Please don't misunderstand me. There's nothing wrong with making money. Lots of it, in fact. It's just not a goal that will make you successful." Reading the bewilderment on Joe's face, he nodded and put his hand up to signal that he would explain. "You want to understand success, yes?"

Joe nodded.

"All right. I'm going to share my Trade Secret with you now."

Pindar leaned forward a bit and softly spoke one word.

"Giving."

Joe waited for more, but apparently, that was it. "I beg your pardon?"

Pindar smiled.

"Giving?" repeated Joe.

Pindar nodded.

"That's the secret to your success? Your Trade Secret? Giving?"

"Indeed," said Pindar.

"Ah," said Joe. "Well, that's . . . that's . . ."

"That's too simple, even if it were true, which it can't possibly be?" asked Pindar. "Is that what you're thinking?"

"Something like that," Joe admitted sheepishly.

Pindar nodded. "Most people have that reaction. In fact, most people just laugh when they hear that the secret to success is giving." He paused. "Then again, most people are nowhere near as successful as they wish they were."

Joe certainly couldn't argue that point.

"You see," Pindar continued, "the majority of people operate with a mindset that says to the fireplace, 'First give me some heat, then I'll throw on some logs.' Or that says to the bank, 'Give me interest on my money, then I'll make a deposit.' And of course, it just doesn't work that way."

Joe frowned, trying to parse the logic of Pindar's examples.

"You see? You can't go in two directions at once. Trying to be successful with making money as your goal is like trying to travel a superhighway at seventy miles an hour with your eyes glued to the rearview mirror." He took another thoughtful sip and waited for Joe to process this thought.

Joe felt as if his brain were going seventy on the highway—in reverse. "Okay," he began slowly, "so you're saying, successful people keep their focus on what they're . . . giving, sharing, whatever," he saw Pindar nod, "and that's what creates their success?"

"Exactly," cried Pindar. "Now we're facing the same direction!"

"But . . . wouldn't an awful lot of people take advantage of you?"

"Excellent question." Pindar set his cup down and leaned forward. "Most of us have grown up seeing the world as a place of limitation rather than as a place of inexhaustible treasures. A world of competition rather than one of co-creation." He saw that Joe was puzzled again. "Dog eat dog," he explained. "As in, 'Oh, sure, we all act polite on the surface, but let's face it, it's really every man for himself.' That about sum it up?"

Joe admitted that it did about sum it up indeed. That's certainly what he believed, anyway.

"Well," said Pindar, "it's simply not true." He noted Joe's skeptical look and continued. "Have you ever heard people say, You can't always get what you want?"

Joe grinned. "You mean, the Rolling Stones?"

Pindar smiled. "Actually, I imagine people were saying that well before Mick Jagger's time. But yes, that's the general idea."

"You're not going to tell me that's not true, are you? That we actually do get what we want?"

"No," said Pindar, "that one is true. In life, you often don't get what you want. But," he leaned forward again and his voice grew softer with emphasis, "here's what you do get—You get what you expect."

Joe frowned again, trying to mentally test out the truth of this last thought.

Pindar leaned back and sipped his coffee, watching Joe. After a moment's silence, he continued.

"Or put it another way: What you focus on is what you get. You've heard the expression 'Go looking for trouble and that's what you'll find?'"

Joe nodded.

"It's true, and not only about trouble. It's true about everything. Go looking for conflict, and you'll find it. Go looking for people to take advantage of you, and they generally will. See the world as a dog-eat-dog place, and you'll always find a bigger dog looking at you as if you're his next meal. Go looking for the best in people, and you'll be amazed at how much talent, ingenuity, empathy and goodwill you'll find.

"Ultimately, the world treats you more or less the way you expect to be treated."

Pindar paused for a moment to let Joe absorb that thought, then added one more.

"In fact, Joe, you'd be amazed at just how much you have to do with what happens to you."

Joe drew a breath. "So," he spoke this next thought slowly, thinking it through out loud, "you're saying, people don't take advantage of you because you don't expect them to? That because you don't put any focus on selfishness and greed, even when it's all around you, it doesn't have much impact on you?" Then he had a flash of inspiration. "Like a healthy immune system—the disease is all around you, but you don't catch it?"

Pindar's eyes sparkled. "Wonderful! That's an exquisite way of putting it." He kept talking as he scribbled in a little notebook he had produced from inside his jacket. "I have to remember that. You mind if I use that bit of brilliance?"

"No, go ahead," Joe gestured grandly, "take my brilliance. I'm full of it." He paused, then added, "Least that's what my wife always says."

Pindar burst out laughing as he slipped his little notebook back into the unseen pocket. He put both hands on his knees and looked directly at the younger man.

"Joe, I'd like to do something with you. I'd like to show you what I call my Five Laws of Stratospheric Success. If you can make a little time, say, every day for a week."

"Seriously?" Joe nearly stuttered. "For a week? I . . . I don't know how much time I can take off. . . ."

Pindar waved his hand vaguely, as if to say, Time means nothing. “Not a problem. All we’ll need is one hour a day. Your lunch hour. You do take time for lunch every day?”

Joe nodded, dumbfounded. The man was going to meet with him every day for a week? And hand over the details of his most valuable Trade Secret?!

“First, though,” Pindar continued, “first you’ll need to agree to my conditions.”

Joe’s heart sank. The conditions. He had forgotten all about that. It was only after he agreed to Pindar’s conditions, Brenda had said, that they would set up further meetings.

Joe gulped. “I really don’t have the means—”

Pindar held up his hands. “Please, don’t worry, it’s nothing like that.”

“So,” Joe began, “do I need to sign an NDA or . . . ?”

This brought a big, booming laugh from Pindar. “No, no non-disclosure agreements—if anything, the opposite. I call these Five Laws my Trade Secret, not because I don’t want people to find them, but for exactly the opposite reason. I call them my Trade Secret so that people will find them—so they’ll seek them. So they’ll place the proper value on them. Because it’s really a term of honor.”

“Excuse me?” Joe was lost.

Pindar smiled. “The word itself. Secret. Originally, it meant something treasured—something sifted, weighed and set apart for its special value. Actually, if I had my way, everyone would know these Five Laws.

“In fact,” he added, “that’s exactly why I have put these conditions in place. Actually, it's just one Condition. Are you ready?"

Joe nodded.

"I need you to agree that you will test every Law I show you by actually trying it out. Not by thinking about it, not by talking about it, but by applying it in your life."

Joe started to give his assent, but Pindar stopped him and continued.

"And that's not all. You must apply each Law right away, the same day you first learn it."

Joe looked at Pindar to see if he was kidding. "Seriously? Before I go to sleep that night? Or I'll turn into a pumpkin?"

Pindar's face relaxed into a grin. "No, you have a point, you won't turn into a pumpkin. But if you don't abide by my Condition, our meetings will come to an end."

"But," Joe stammered, "not to sound impertinent, how would you know?"

"Another excellent question. How would I know?" Pindar nodded thoughtfully. "I wouldn't. But you would. It's the honor system. If you don't find a way to apply each Law I show you the very same day you learn it, I'll trust that the next morning, you'll call Brenda to cancel the rest of our appointments."

He looked at Joe.

"I have to know you're taking this seriously. But here's what's far more important: you have to know you're taking this seriously."

Joe nodded slowly. "I think I understand. You want to make sure I'm not wasting your time. Fair enough."

Pindar smiled. "Joe, no offense, but you don't have that power."

Joe looked confused.

"I mean, the power to waste my time. Only I can do that. And truthfully, it's a vice I gave up a long time ago. The reason for my Condition is that I don't want to see you wasting your time."

Joe looked down and saw Pindar's outstretched hand. He took it and gave it a firm shake. He felt a thrill go through him, as if he had just embarked on an adventure worthy of Indiana Jones, and mirrored the Chairman's broad smile with one of his own.

"You've got a deal."

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

BOB BURG is coauthor of the Wall Street Journal best-seller The Go-Giver and its companion volumes Go-Givers Sell More and The Go-Giver Leader. A former television personality and top-producing salesperson, Bob speaks to corporations, organizations and at sales and leadership conferences worldwide on topics at the core of The Go-Giver books. Addressing audiences ranging from sixty to sixteen thousand, Bob has shared the platform with some of today's top business leaders, broadcast personalities, coaches, athletes and political leaders, including a former U.S. president. He is also the author of Adversaries into Allies and the classic Endless Referrals, which has sold more than a quarter of a million copies and is still used today as a training manual in many corporations. He was named by the American Management Association as one of the Top 30 Most Influential Thought Leaders in Business for 2014.

JOHN DAVID MANN has been writing about business, leadership and the laws of success for more than thirty years. As a high school student, he led a group of friends in creating their own successful high school. After establishing himself as a concert cellist and prizewinning composer, he built a multimillion-dollar sales organization of more than a hundred thousand people before turning to writing and publishing. In addition to coauthoring The Go-Giver books with Bob Burg, John is also coauthor of the New York Times bestsellers Flash Foresight (with Daniel Burrus) and The Red Circle (with Brandon Webb) and the national bestseller Among Heroes (with Brandon Webb). His Take the Lead (with Betsy Myers) was named by Tom Peters and the Washington Post as Best Leadership Book of 2011.

ABOUT THE AUTHORS

The Go-Giver, Expanded Edition book is available at (click on the logo):

amazon.com.

BARNES & NOBLE.com
www.bn.com

Soceoread

bookpal