Quarterly Fund Manager Review

The fund generated positive absolute returns over the quarter and outperformed the average fund in its Investment Association (IA) peer group. Within growth assets, most of the regional equity exposures, except Pacific ex-Japan, contributed to performance. The underlying managers' holdings in the information technology, financials and health care sectors boosted performance. At a stock level, the position in investment bank Morgan Stanley continued to rally on the back of strong earnings announced in July, with the wealth management and investment management businesses registering growth. At the portfolio level, the long position in the Financial Select Sector Index added value, while the short position in the S&P Homebuilders Select Industry Index weighed on returns. The underlying managers' holdings in the industrials, energy and financials sectors enhanced gains. At the portfolio level, a position in a third-party value fund and a long position in the FTSE 100 index added value. At a stock level, the holding in Novo Nordisk advanced after it reported solid second quarter results and upgraded its full year revenue guidance. The upgrade was driven by strong sales of newer drugs, and consistent sales growth in its North America and international markets. Shares in Headlam rallied following a strong trading update, where it indicated that group revenues had improved to pre-COVID-19 levels. The holding in gold weighed on returns, while the allocation to cash added some value.
