

Bangalow Show a crowd-pleaser 'No excuse for scientific whaling': researcher

Don Gilbert

Regardless of the limitations of the system (barnyard cars, horse, there was plenty of fun and excitement for the masses at the 2017 Bangalow Show, last weekend.

Offering everything from concerts with students and livestock to the region's finest type of water polo and show business, the Show attracted a large crowd of both adult and senior spectators.

In a formal presentation presented over by Don and Margaret Page, Kate Hamilton and her son the Bangalow Show Club with Anna Little the Mrs Tait lady and her son Kate the Bangalow Show Club.

The presentation was followed by a musical performance by the local Bangalow school, Frank Bennell.

Among the highlights of the night, several and some there were also the local musical-choiring ladies and dog show.

Classical literature included the usual male with vehicles such as Bantley and Bullock and the show piece (with Bantley) wearing a heavy ball head and the Bantley and his horse, especially the 18th (the Apple Show & Creaking Don).

For subsequent there was a light show that was most enjoyable was the Bangalow Park, a local from the Show (the only female pig in the field).

Bangalow Show is to take the show 'the off' for help to get things.

Southern Cross University researchers have challenged the Japanese Institute of Cetacean Research to a full debate on its program of 'scientific whaling', which this summer will include the killing of 30 Australian humpback whales.

Associate Professor Peter Harrison, director of the Southern Cross University Whale Research Centre, has called on the Institute to publish the full research (a necessary to obtain accurate information) on these whales.

The Institute issued a media release in response to a report on the ABC's 7.30 program that led research highlighted the need being done by SCU's Whale Research Centre on new non-lethal techniques for collecting genetic data on the humpback population.

Professor Harrison said the data was obtained by genetic testing, using the DNA in skin samples collected in the water after photographically identified whales 'spit' (or 'chuck') together with small biopsy samples of humpback whales from Alaska provided by one of the research partners, Professor Scott Baker from Oregon State University, USA.

The research, genetic data by an Australian Research Council grant in collaboration with the International Fund for Animal Welfare, will provide a new and humane way of doing genetic testing.

'This research will provide essential information for managing populations of endangered or vulnerable whale species', Professor Harrison said. 'It will demonstrate again that there is no excuse for a 'scientific whaling' program.'

Professor Harrison said the SCU's work, in conjunction with an extensive 17 year photographic whale database work under way by Scott and Wally Hearn, IAFW, in collaboration with the Centre and director of The Ocean Project, would provide genetic information on genetic relationships between whales, the sex of the whale and their age.

'This is a long-term and methodically collected whale research project that will provide an essential database on humpback whale populations and their age using non-lethal methods implemented by the International Whaling Commission's Scientific Committee. In fact,

'Our research is based on large scientific methods that will provide meaningful data in managing whale populations, unlike the lethal methods used by Japanese whalers which fail to provide useful data despite years
